SITUATION SUMMARY

EAS Test, 06/15/2016

On 06/15/16, FEMA will conduct the last in a series of multi-state tests of the new “National Periodic Test” EAS event code.

- This test will involve over 3,000 broadcast outlets in nine states drawn from FEMA Regions VII, XI and X.
- Starting at 1320 hours, Pacific time, subject to a minute or two of propagation delay though the IPAWS and EAS legacy “daisy chain”, broadcasters will sound the usual EAS tones followed by this message text:
 - “This is a National test of the Emergency Alert System. This is only a test. Broadcast and cable operators in your area have developed this system in voluntary cooperation with FEMA, the FCC and local authorities to keep you informed in the event of an emergency. If this had been an actual emergency an official message would have followed the alert tone. This concludes this National test of the Emergency Alert System.”
- This text was crafted to make this event sound as much like a regular Required Monthly Test message as possible. This is in preparation for the next full National EAS Test, currently slated for late September.
- In prior regional tests FEMA has cancelled the broadcast in states where there were ongoing events that might be confused with the test. FEMA says it will convene a conference call with NWS and state EM agencies shortly before the test to get a final go/no-go from them.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

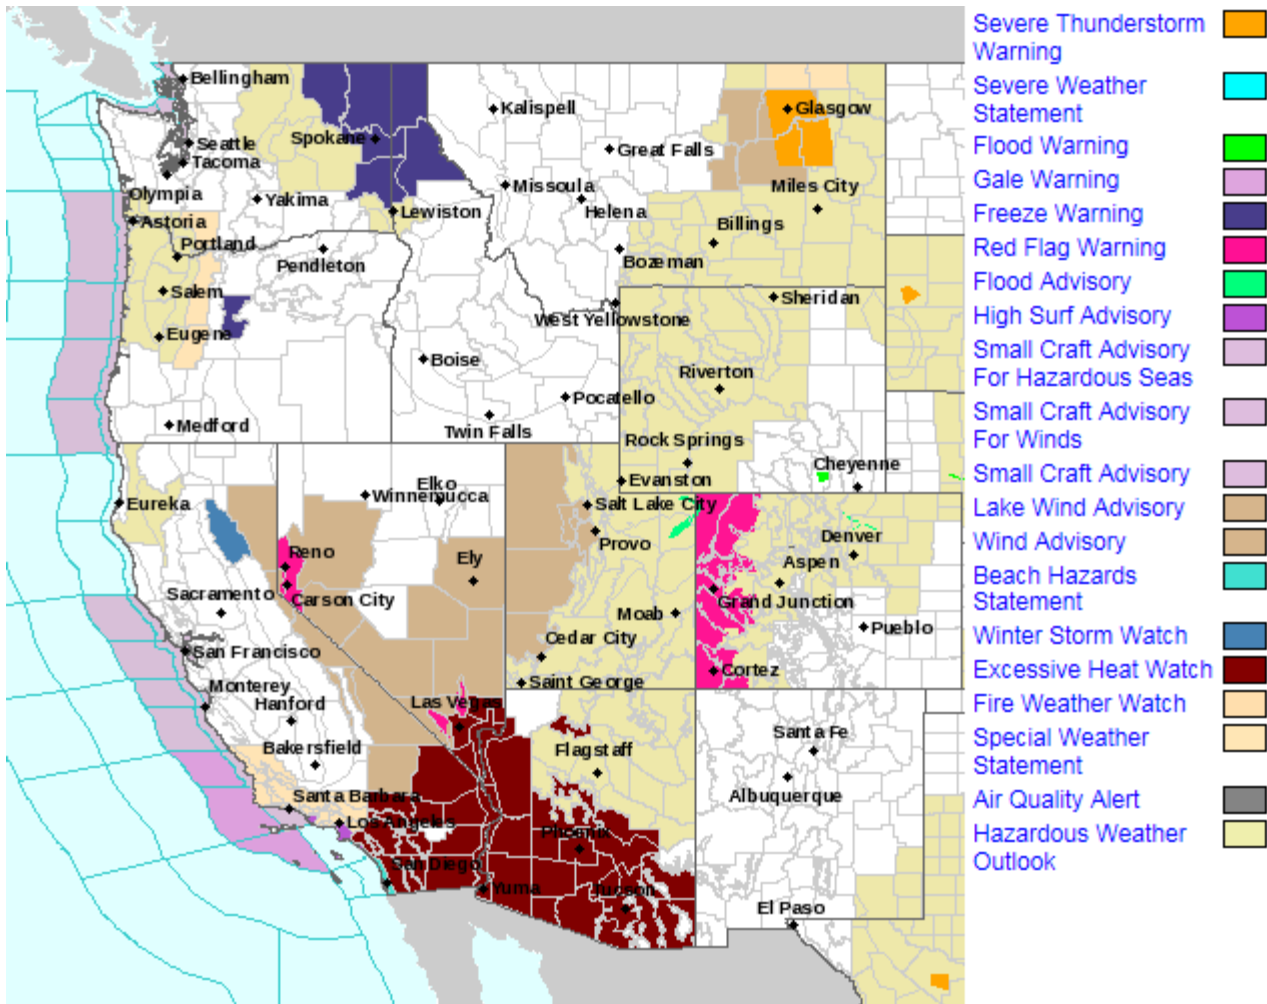

An unseasonably strong, cold weather system centered over Vancouver Island is headed our way, will pass through the Pacific Northwest tonight and arrive over Northern California Wednesday with cloudiness and moisture. Some showers are likely to develop over the northern third of the area from this system. Wednesday night looks to be the wettest period with the most widespread shower events, but they will still be mostly over our northwest and northern mountains. Wetting rain (≈ 0.10 "") would be most likely in those areas with lighter amounts elsewhere. Gusty afternoon westerly winds will be in place today, especially near and inland of the coast south of Cape Mendocino through The Delta and along and east of the Sierra Crest. Moderate to fairly strong west to southwest winds will develop Wednesday afternoon as the weather system moves into Northern California. Temperatures will drop to around 15-20 degrees below seasonal norms for Wednesday and Thursday with the warmest inland valleys seeing afternoon highs of 70-75. This system will linger into Friday with a few showers lingering along the Oregon border. Any thunderstorms that occur with this system will be isolated and wet. High pressure will quickly spread north across California from the Desert Southwest over the weekend and bring in much warmer, drier conditions that will last through next week. Triple digit heat is expected to develop for the warmer inland areas next week, and relative humidity (RH) will be low with many areas seeing overnight RH recovery in the 35-50% range and afternoon RH 10-18%. A chance of some afternoon and evening thunderstorms may be in place Monday near and south of Tahoe, otherwise none are expected early next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A trough over the Pacific Northwest is slowly pushing into the central part of the state this morning. This trough will bring breezy weather to portions of the mountains and deserts over the next couple of days. Winds of 15-25 mph have already developed across the Kern County Mountains and expect widespread west and northwest winds of 20-30 with gusts to 40 mph in the Sierras as well as deserts by this afternoon. The desert interface areas such as the Antelope Valley, Banning Pass and the eastern side of the Cleveland National Forest will likely see the strongest winds during the next two days. In addition, Santa Barbara County may see north winds of 15-25 mph tonight and again Wednesday night. High temperatures will continue to be moderate for this time of year with highs in the 60s along the coast to the lower 80s in the San Joaquin Valley to mid 90s in the desert. No precipitation is expected today or throughout the outlook period. Winds will ease off Friday, marking the transition to a much hotter and drier weather pattern. A massive high pressure ridge over the Southern Plains is expected to move westward into the Four Corners area this weekend into early next week. Models indicate this may be one of the strongest ridges of the past few years, and by Monday, temperatures will be 15-25 degrees above normal. Record setting heat is expected early next week as valley temperatures surpass 110 degrees with the low desert possibly reaching 120. Minimum RH will likely fall into the single digits over a wide expanse of the district. RH recovery may be poor over most areas due to light offshore pressure gradients. The heat may ease back a bit toward the end of next week, but temperatures look to remain well above average through most of the end of the month.
